25 BURNS DETECTIVES TRAILING ROSENTHAL GUNMEN IN THIS CITY

BULLETINS.

AUBURN, N. Y., Aug. 3.—A man captured today by the local police is believed to be either "Lefty Louis" or Sam Schepps, wanted by the New York detectives for complicity in the murder of Herman Rosenthal. He gave the name of John Dornan.

CAMDEN, N. J., Aug. 3.—A man believed to be "Lefty Louie," wanted for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, was arrested here today. The man gave his name as William Reynolds, and declared he knew nothing of the New York shooting.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—District Attorney Whitman's office admitted today that Attorney Louis Spiegel, counsel for the two Rosenthal slayer suspects under arrest, is negotiating for the surrender of the two fugitives still wanted, "Gib the Blood" and "Lefty Louie." Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty announced detectives had found in "Lefty Louie's" room the revolver with which he probably used in the murder.

The two principal men wanted by the detectives in the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the New York gambler, have been found at a Summer resort near Boston and are under espionage.

This information came today from Charles H. Smith, manager of the local detective agency of William J. Burns. It is declared that gamblers living in Boston will be brought into the case. The Burns agency in Boston has twenty-five men working on the case.

ON THE TRAIL OF "LEFTY" AND BIG JACK.

It is believed that the two men referred to by the Burns agency are "Lefty Louie," the man who it is charged fired the fatal shot, and "Big Jack" Zelig. These two men were reported to have been seen in Boston this week.

District Attorney Whitman of New York, who was in Boston yesterday, and who was in Manchester, Vt., today, was seized by the AMERICAN over the long distance telephone today about the fugitives. He said:

"I expect to get them all."

Manager Smith of the Burns agency said today:

"The two men we want are in hiding at a Summer resort not far from Boston. We can put our hands on them when we want them.

"I don't mind telling you there are some gamblers in this city today—men that live here—that will be roped into this case. We know who they are and we know where they are, and when it breaks there will be a few surprises for somebody.

"I have got twenty-five men at work on this case. I was with Mr. Whitman all day yesterday and we went over the city together. He has gone to Vermont

BAY STATE MOOSERS GO WEST

The New England Bull Moosers are off for their Chicago convention. They left the North Station at 12:40 today in six Pullmans with a dining car attached. They departed while flags and bandannas were being waved and songs were being sung. It was an enthusiastic send-off.

On the train were thirty-one of the thirty-six Massachusetts delegates. One of the two women delegates, Alice Carpenter, went last night. Four others were unable to make the trip. The delegates were attached to the Continental Limited. They will reach Chicago tomorrow afternoon.

With them were delegates from Maine, New Hampshire and Rhode Island. There were also many guests. The only Massachusetts woman delegate with the party was Grace A. Johnson, the wife of Professor Lewis J. Johnson of Harvard.

Before the train got away the station was thronged with men and women. The women were mostly young and fashionably dressed. They all carried some insignia to show that they belonged to the Moose party. Some had flags and red bandannas intertwined.

Gospel Hymn for Sendoff.

The Rev. David Gay of Cambridge, who appeared at the Faneuil Hall with a bundle of resolutions that almost started a riot, was at the station apparently as the escort of a bevy of girls. He started in a fine baritone voice the old gospel song:

"God be with you 'till we meet again."

The girls followed him and others took it up. The big station echoed with the song.

The Massachusetts delegation is as follows:

Adelard M. Potvin, Holyoke; Richard J. Talbot, Springfield; J. Frank Drake, Springfield; Frank Kinsman, Leominster; J. W. Whittaker, Gardner; Stephen H. French, Athol; Eli Bouchard, Worcester; William N. Osgood, Lowell; August N. Parry, Jr., Amesbury; Benjamin Pearson, Newbury; Rudolph W. Currier, Lynn; Osborn McCleod, Cliftondale; G. F. ## LIGHTNING BOLT IN A BRAINTREE CHURCH PLAYS STRANGE FREAKS

A bolt of lightning bored a hole through the Braintree Baptist Church, from top to bottom, at 3:30 a. m. today.

The bolt hit the bell-tower, shot down through the tower to the roof, ripped out several shingles, drove through the roof beams and the ceiling plaster, then dropped to one of the pews in the auditorium, drilled a hole through the pew, kept on going down through the floor and into the cellar, where it quit working.

The bolt was "going down" all the way. But it don't do over $200 damage, for it failed to start a fire in bell-tower roof, pew or flooring.

Whole Richardson Estate to Widow; Nothing for Children

Under the will of Dr. Maurice Howe Richardson, the surgeon who died last Wednesday at his home, No. 224 Beacon street, the widow, Mrs. Margaret White Richardson, is made executrix and sole beneficiary. The will was made November 15, 1899. The amount of the estate is not known.

The six children receive nothing. The only mention of them appears in a statement which reads:

"I purposely make neither devise nor bequest in this will to my living children here the six children are named) and I exclude them * * * from any claim upon my estate of any nature or description."

$10,000 BLAZE IN INDIA ST.

Ten thousand dollars' damage was done by a two-alarm fire in the four-story paper and rag warehouse of James O'Sullivan & Company at No. 46 India street during the morning rush hour today.

Thomas F. Lawton, foreman of the building, found the stairway cut off by fire. He jumped from a second-floor window. His face was scorched and his hair was singed by the flames and his knees were wrenched when he landed on the India street pavement.

Smoke from the burning paper caused a panic among old-time residents of seven or eight brick houses along Wharf street, which runs at right angles to India street. These families have clung to their homesteads in the midst of the congested business section, forming an unexpected domestic community in the realm of trade.

Mr. and Mrs. William McGilleuddy and Miss Alice McGilleuddy were asleep in their home, No. 21 Wharf street. The rear of No. 21 is just across a narrow alley from the back of the paper warehouse. Miss Nellie Haggerty, a neighbor, roused the McGilleuddys, who came out hastily clad.

Mr. and Mrs. James Murphy and their six children at No. 15 were up. They fled to the street when the smoke came rolling from across the alley.

In No. 13 Miss Ella O'Brien roused Mrs. Annie McCarthy, and the two women hurried to the street.

Mrs. James Murphy of No. 15, after gathering her six children safely about her, said:

"Well, I don't see how what we families on Wharf street will all have to get out some time, what with the business buildings and warehouses and fires and one thing and another bothering us."

The fire started on the first floor, probably from spontaneous combustion. It was discovered at 8 o'clock by Dennis Brennan, laborer, on the first floor, who ran out and raised an alarm. Thomas F. Lawton, the foreman, came down from the third floor, found the stairway cut off and made him jump from a second-story window.

Daring Gem Robbery at Hotel Touraine in Guests' Absence

Chief Inspector John R. McGarr, head of the Bureau of Criminal Investigation of the police department, was today notified of a daring robbery at the Hotel Touraine.

According to the report as submitted to the police, jewelry, checks and trinkets to the value of many hundreds of dollars were stolen from the suite occupied by Thomas Hudson and his wife, who had registered at the hotel only a few hours before the robbery occurred. Mr. Hudson is a cotton buyer of Newport, Ark.

Detectives for the Touraine have been working on the case since midnight. Mr. and Mrs. Hudson dined in the Dutch room, and then went to the theatre. In their absence, a young man walked up to the clerk's desk and said: "Would you mind letting me have the key to my room, 524?" This was the room occupied by the Hudsons.

The clerk complied with the request, suspecting nothing. When the Hudsons returned they found the suite had been ransacked.

Gilmartin was twenty-seven years old, married, and lived at No. 210 Bennington street, East Boston.

CRAP GAME MAY END IN KILLING

In a crap game quarrel over 40 cents between colored firemen on the coke collier Melrose early today John T. Outlar of Newport News, Va., inflicted a deep slash seven inches long with a jackknife on the neck of Ted Lewis, cutting through cords and muscles to the bone. He may die. Outlar pleaded guilty in Malden District Court later in the day to a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon. He told the police he struck in self-defence as Lewis drew a revolver.

Surgeons at the Whidden Hospital, to Everett, where Lewis was taken, say he has a fighting chance for life.

The collier is at her wharf in East Everett. The crap game was on at 2 a. m. Outlar says that Lewis owed him forty cents and he asked for it and that Lewis threatened to "shoot his head off" if he asked for it again. This led to words and Outlar says Lewis drew a revolver.

Outlar grabbed a jackknife and made a terrific sweeping lunge, catching Lewis on the back of the neck and drawing the blade around till he made a cut seven inches long. Outlar stabbed again, cutting Lewis' right arm to the bone. Then Outlar hid.

The police came, took Lewis to the hospital and then hunted high and low for Outlar. An hour later they found him asleep under the bridge. He was handcuffed and taken to the hospital where Lewis, just out of the ether identified him.

MEXICANS FIRE ON U. S. TROOPS

EL PASO, Aug. 3.—Half a hundred or more shots were exchanged between armed men in Mexico and United States soldiers on border guard duty early today. The firing was opened from the Mexican side and is declared by American army officials to be a deliberate attempt to embroil the United States in the Mexican revolution. Three of the bullets struck the home of C. H. Cole. Later the home of A. D. Martine was also hit. The American soldiers replied and sent a score or more of shots over the border.

BARRY WON'T HEAR LOYALISTS

Richard P. Barry, member of the State Board of Arbitration, at the hearing the board gave to Herbert Parker, attorney for the "loyal" employes of the Boston Elevated Railway Company, refused to listen to the lawyer's arguments. During the hearing he sat at the further end of the room, with his back to every one.

The hearing lasted several hours. Chairman Howland said the board, having heard both the Elevated and former employes was prepared to listen to any other interests that might be concerned.

James H. Vahey, counsel for he strikers, said the board had heard both sides, and there was no use of hearing another.

The Boston Central Labor Union was represented by its president, Frank H. McCarthy, and Henry Abrahams. They also protested against the board's hearing the "loyalists."

After hearing the protests, the board went into executive session. When they returned the chairman said the board had decided to hear Mr. Parker.

At this point Mr. Barry arose and said: "Not the board, not the board! Only two members of it."

ISLAND OF NICARIA PROCLAIMS FREEDOM

ATHENS, Greece, Aug. 3.—The Turkish island of Nicaria (also known as Icaria), in the Aegean Sea, proclaimed today its independence of the Turkish government. The inhabitants, who number about 15,000, seized and imprisoned all the Turkish officials.

The island of Nicaria, which has an area of about fifty square miles, is famous in mythology for the death of Icarus, whose waxen wings, according to the fable, melted while he was flying. It is now occupied almost solely by charcoal burners of Greek descent. The islanders have hitherto paid an annual tribute to the Pasha of Rhodes.

EXCLUSIVELY IN SUNDAY'S AMERICAN

PARKER WILL NOT MAKE RACE

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—Colonel John M. Parker of New Orleans, who has been mentioned both as a Vice-Presidential possibility and permanent chairman of the Progressive National Convention, has announced in Chicago.

Colonel Parker announced today he would not accept a Vice-Presidential nomination. He said he hoped to see the new party a "white man's" party, and hoped it would stand for fair primaries. He was ready to go on the floor of the convention, he said, and fight for both issues. It is believed generally among the delegates and leaders so far assembled that the negro question in the South will be solved by the method frequently suggested in Republican national conventions. A rule will be adopted basing the representation at the conventions on the vote cast for the party.

Negro Vote Question.

This, it is pointed out, would end negro domination, because the negro vote in the South is negligible. There will be a number of negro delegates in the convention, but they will all be from the Northern States, where Mr. Roosevelt has made the strongest showing of the primaries.

"The question of the permanent chairmanship has not yet been decided. It also was suggested that a Southern Democrat by given the honor of presiding. There is a general movement afoot, however, to make the temporary chairman permanent. This, it is pointed out, would save time. The address to be given by Governor after ex-Senator Beveridge, as temporary chairman, makes his keynote speech, would take the place of the speech usually delivered by the permanent chairman.

"There will be more women delegates at the convention than ever took part in a similar gathering. According to the estimates, made before the temporary roll was made up, thirty women will be recognized as having a vote in party affairs. Illinois will contribute two—Jane Addams and Hannah Wilmarth.

DILLON DECLARES ROOSEVELT SENT A 'PEREMPTORY ORDER'

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Assistant Secretary of the Interior T. C. Laglin today received a letter from Judge R. B. Dillon stating that Colonel Roosevelt insisted on Dillon's coming out for him, and that he refused to do so, preferring to withdraw as Republican nominee for Governor of Ohio when he saw that Roosevelt was determined to put a third ticket in the field.

A portion of the Dillon letter read:

I have not desired to continue discussion of the unfortunate affair, but was surprised that there was any question as to the attitude of Mr. Roosevelt as representative of party in Ohio and other States. As everybody knows, or soon will know, his peremptory demand has from the beginning been that with respect to the regular nominee for Governor, that nominee must declare for him or he will nominate another candidate who will. This was true in my case, and I refused.

Mrs. Grace Free, Hurries to Blind Son

Husband Denounces Her Acquittal

NOT SURPRISED BY VERDICT, MRS. GRACE WIRES TO AMERICAN.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 3.—To Editor of the Boston American: I am gratified beyond expression, but not surprised. I knew that God would not forsake me in my troubles. I was taught to believe that He will never forsake the innocent. I am thankful for one who helped me. I will return to my little boy in a day or so and devote the rest of my life to him. I'll live with my mother in Philadelphia and try to comfort her as long as I live.

(Signed) DAISY O. GRACE.

MRS. DAISY OPIE GRACE AND HER MOTHER.

Says Wife Is Guilty in Eyes of God—Plans to Sue for Divorce.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 3. — Mrs. Daisy Opie Grace, declared guilty by a jury of the charge of shooting her husband with intent to kill, planned today to hurry to Philadelphia, where her blind son, whom she has not seen for weeks, lies ill.

Hardly had the cheering of the throng in the court room at the conclusion of the dramatic trial died away than Mrs. Grace's elation at the verdict was succeeded by her concern for the son to whom she is devoted.

She read the telegram from her sister in Philadelphia that the little, blind fellow was ill with alarm upon her relative.

"I will go to little Webster at once," said Mrs. Grace to her counsel, who had hurried to congratulate her.

Then the crowd in the court cheered the verdict and surged around Mrs. Grace and many of the women weeping. At last the deadly whiteness of Mrs. Grace's face was relieved by a flush and she began to smile.

Then she approached each of the twelve jurors and gave them her hand.

"I feel like kissing and hugging all of you," said Mrs. Grace. "I trusted you all the time. I knew you would not believe what they said about me.

"God bless you gentlemen," cried Mrs. Grace. There was a note of hysteria in Mrs. Grace's voice and she seemed on the verge of a collapse, but her lawyers patted her on the shoulder and urged her to restrain herself and she soon became calm.

Mrs. Grace's statement made in court had a tremendous effect on the jury and the main assertions were generally credited, especially those relating to the sums she had lavished on Grace and his attentions to other women.

It developed today that Mrs. Grace's story of the shooting was a carefully prepared declamation, pruned, amended and polished by her lawyers, and so carefully rehearsed as a dramatic offering by a professional actress.

There were 8,000 words in the statement, but Mrs. Grace never faltered once during its delivery. The bringing of Mr. Grace into the court on a stretcher was done by the prosecution in an effort to refute the accused wife to break down, but it failed.

With her husband, paralyzed from the wound she was accused of inflicting, gazing at her with a cynical grin, she spoke without faltering.

Grace was not in court. He had been taken back to his home in Newnan, and there heard of the verdict.

"In her heart she knows she is guilty," declared Grace. She may now be secure in the eyes of the law, but she is guilty in the eyes of God. It is bad enough to be here helpless, even if I had been shot in a good cause, but it is almost unbearable when I have been shot in cold blood."

It was said that Grace would make a statement of the whole case, and that he will sue for divorce.

MORE CLIMAXES IN RUSSELL CASE

The second fight for half of the $500,000 left by Daniel Russell of Melrose promises to reveal further astonishing climaxes when the case is resumed before Master Percy on Monday in East Cambridge, with the two claimants, "Dakota Dan" and "Fresno Dan," again confronting each other and also William C. Russell, the recognized heir, whom both declare is their brother.

Ferdinand B. Almy, the executor, is expected again to face the fire of questions by Attorney William H. Scharton, counsel for the Dakota ranchman. He has already been subjected to an exhaustive examination as to why "Fresno Dan" was recognized as the rightful heir under the will, and as to the expenses incurred in the contest for the fortune.

Before a jam of spectators each day this hearing is replete not only with tense, dramatic situation, but with humorous incidents which remind those present of the semi-tragedy in which the buffoon breaks in with a joke just as the heroine is denouncing the villain.

The most spectacular scene so far in either of the two hearings of this will contest came when William C. Russell, the recluse heir who stayed at home while his brother wandered; "Dakota Dan" and "Fresno Dan" were lined up in a row and Executor Almy on the stand described the physical features of all three men, compared and contrasted them, in an effort to show that the California fruit picker more closely resembled William C. Russell than did "Dakota Dan."

An amusing incident occurred also when "Dakota Dan" walked over to the jury box, where some of his women supporters were seated, leaned over the rail, grabbed the hand of one of them and kissed her. She was taken by surprise and blushed.

Master Percy has ruled that Mr. Scharton may call William C. Russell, Executor Almy and other witnesses for the Russell estate and question them as to their reasons for accepting "Fresno Dan" as the Daniel Drake Russell heir.

13,300 CAR MEN VOTE TO STRIKE

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—Voting of the 13,300 street car employes of Chicago on the strike question ended at 4 a. m. today. Tellers began at once the task of counting the ballots.

The official vote will not be known until tomorrow, but it was stated unofficially today that the chances on the vote kept by the officials of the unions involved and the early work of the tellers showed beyond doubt that the strike had carried by an overwhelming vote.

Whether the vote means that a strike will be called at once or whether an attempt to arbitrate will be made rests with the international officials of the union. It is generally believed, however, that an attempt to effect a peaceful settlement will be made.

ROSENTHAL GUN MEN NEAR HERE

over Sunday. I don't know whether he will return to Boston on his way to New York or not. He may."

"Know Where Men Are."

Mr. Smith was asked if the two men referred to were "Lefty Louie" and "Big Jack" Zelig. He said:

"I can't tell you anything other than that we know where there are two men we want. When the time comes, you will know all the facts."

Mr. Smith said he didn't know whether gamblers in any of the other cities were mixed up in the Rosenthal murder. He was looking only for the local end.

The Burns detectives worked all day yesterday and up to 6 o'clock this morning on the case. Some of the detectives were back at work again at 7 o'clock. Assistant Manager Frank H. O'Leary of the Burns agency said the entire city and suburbs were covered yesterday in automobiles in the hunt.

Mr. Whitman said he will not return to Boston, but will leave Manchester, Vt., for New York tonight or tomorrow morning.

He was asked if any results had come from his stop-over in Boston yesterday when he had a conference with William Jay Schieffelin, who heads a New York committee of rich men which is backing to financial end of to probe.

"I cannot talk about the case now," said Mr. Whitman, "and you can see why I cannot go into details."

"I Expect to Get Them All."

He was asked if the fact that he will return to Boston indicates that there is no more work to be done here in connection with the search for Rosenthal's murderers.

"That does not necessarily follow," replied Mr. Whitman.

Then he added:

"You can say, though, that I expect to get them all."

It was at Fleischmanns, twenty-six miles from Kingston, N. Y., that "Whitey Lewis" was captured. The others are believed to be somewhere in the wooded wilds near there.

Assassins May Be Surrounded.

The latest New York dispatch says it is believed that "Gib the Blood"—whose real name is Harry Horowitz—and "Lefty" Louis are surrounded by twenty Central Office men and deputy sheriffs in the Catskill Mountains. The authorities believe the two men will be under arrest by tonight. This, of course, conflicts with the Boston reports.

This statement was given out in Police Commissioner Waldo's office after it became known that detectives who have been following Horowitz and his companion through Delaware and Ulster counties have located their men and drawn a cordon around them.

Detectives Cassassa and McKenna were located on a West Shore train while Lieutenant Dougherty telephoned instructions to the police chiefs of the mountain towns. The territory around which the Central Office men had laid their besieging line is in the southeast end of Delaware county and the northeast end of Ulster county. The retreat in which "Whitey Lewis," who was taken in New York yesterday and held for murder, was found by Detective James F. Harvey. The detective posed as a farm hand, while Lewis pretended to be a chauffeur out of work.

No Clews Found Here.

The Boston police have found no trace of the men wanted.

"Whitey Lewis," who was caught near Kingston and taken to New York, refuses to admit any knowledge of the shooting, and says that on the day before the murder he was at work in town with his relatives. His statement is vague, however, as to other times "Lefty Louie" live.

He was arraigned before a coroner, charged with firing a shot which caused Rosenthal's death. The proceedings were brief, and the case was adjourned until Tuesday afternoon. The prisoner said his real name was Frank Muller, but refused to give his address. According to records at headquarters, Whitey's real name is Frank Siedenshuhe. He is listed as a pickpocket, thief and free user of firearms. His picture is in the Rogues' Gallery.

Whitman Sees Schieffelin.

The District Attorney was in Boston several hours before his presence was known. He went to the Touraine about noon and engaged a room. William Jay Schieffelin always has a room there and was at the hotel, possibly by appointment with the District Attorney.

As soon as Whitman had reached his room, word was sent to Mr. Schieffelin. They were closeted for a long time. At the conference it was said they discussed developments in the case, and Mr. Schieffelin reiterated the voluntary offer made by him. F. H. Osterbridge, Robert Fulton Cutting, Isaac Sperer and other rich New York men to furnish whatever money is needed to carry the probe of the murder and the police scandal to a finish.

At the end of the conference Mr. Whitman left the hotel. He took a train for Manchester, Vt., where he joined his wife last night at the Equinox Hotel. They attended the theatrical performance in the evening.

Between the time when the midnight train from New York arrived in Boston at 7 a. m. and his appearance at the Touraine, Mr. Whitman put in busy hours, but he veiled his activities.

A representative of another Boston detective agency is in Vermont in the vicinity of the hotel in which Mr. Whitman is today.

His search is being conducted entirely independent of local police departments. He is endeavoring to capture the suspects through private detectives, and his efforts have been spurred by the fact that detectives of the New York police department on Thursday night succeeded in capturing "Whitey Lewis" in the Catskills. Whitman wants to get hold of all the prisoners before they are taken by the police.

Boston is well sprinkled with New York gamblers, and the police believe that through some of them a clew may be obtained which will lead to locating "Lefty Louie" and "Big Jack."

The gamblers have found New York "unhealthful" under present conditions. Fearful that they may be tangled up in the turmoil resulting from Rosenthal's death and the confessions of "Bald Jack" Rose and the other prisoners, gamblers, big and little, have been quietly dropping out of the big city for days, and so Boston finds many of them here.

There are many rumors about the search in Boston. One is that a woman, possibly Mrs. Rasel, who was attacked in New York, gave Whitman a tip that the suspects were here.

LIEUTENANT BECKER DECLARES HIS BROTHER IS PERFECTLY HONEST

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Lieutenant John Becker, chief of detectives in the Tenderloin precinct and a brother of Charles A. Becker, late "Strong Arm" leader and under indictment for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, made a vigorous defense today of his brother's integrity in his financial deals.

He insisted that all the insinuations are without warrant and that investigation by any fair minded person will show this. He was incensed because of the publication of a story that gave the reader the opinion that he was his brother's "dummy" in the recent purchase of several lots in the newly opened Van Cortland estates section of the Bronx.

"My Own Money."

"I bought that property with my own money, paying only $1,000 down for it," said Becker. "The remainder of the cost I took over on mortgages. I've been in the police department since 1898, and my salary is $2,250 a year and I am single. You can readily see therefore that I can easily get such a pretty sum together.

"This isn't the first time I've purchased property in the Bronx. I've been steadily in Long Island real estate and expect to be for the rest of my natural days. I'm not the only policeman who invested in real estate. Look at that patrolman named Brown up in the Bronx. Why, he saw his chance, bought up property that was soon to be opened up by extensions of rapid transit facilities, and now he's worth half a million dollars.

"I'm certain the property will soon advance in value, and that the deal we've made to pay 6 per cent. interest on the mortgages will prove no loss to any of us.

Says Brother Was Lucky.

"I don't know of any property Charles bought except that piece over on Gilmville avenue. That wasn't nearly as costly, either, as one would believe from reading of it.

"I want to say that my brother Charles was always interested in investments. He was always lucky, too. He would take chances on things, putting up $25 on the chance of getting back $100, on many occasions.

HAMMERSTEIN TO STAY IN LONDON

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Oscar Hammerstein was simply bubbling with joy when he arrived on the Lusitania today—glad to get back to New York. Questioned regarding new musical talent he had discovered Mr. Hammerstein said:

"The biggest discovery I've made is a dog that leads an orchestra. I call him 'Wagner.' He's an astonishingly clever dog. Wags his tail, you know, instead of waving a baton and the orchestra keeps time to it. I shall bring him over with me next time."

Hammerstein intends to remain in New York only a few weeks and then to return to London.

"Unfortunately I own no opera house over there, a veritable 'Waltz Elephant,'" he said. "But I'm going to grin and bear it. I've given them one season of good opera and I'm going to give them another anyway. Some of the English newspapers said I did not deliver the goods. They don't know the goods when they see them.

"My season of opera will last from next October to January. I'm going to charge popular prices—perhaps the highest priced seats will be only $2.50 or $3. It is the middle class that makes opera pay. I want to cater to them. Covent Garden is simply a club for wealthy classes."

MEAT HIGHEST EVER IN BOSTON

The price of meat is at top price in Boston. Never before has it reached the present almost prohibitive figure. Prices today are ten and fifteen cents a pound higher than five months ago. Some of the marketmen declare that the situation is so grave that it warrants action by Congress.

The following table will show the difference in prices between those of five months ago and those today.

| | Five Months Ago. | Today. |
|---|---|---|
| Porterhouse | 20-30 | 35-45 |
| Sirloin | 12-20 | 30-40 |
| Rump steak | 15-20 | 35-40 |
| Lamb chops | 15-20 | 35-40 |
| Pot roast | 12-15 | 25-30 |
| Veal cutlets | 14-18 | 30-35 |

Three of the principal dealers in Boston state that a slight drop in beef will occur next week. The present boost, they assert, is due to the scarcity of cattle during the past week in Chicago.

The increased cost will cause serious financial loss to the many inmates of working girls' homes, as the price of table board must necessarily be increased. In some places substitutes for meat are being tried.

The Cambridge Y. W. C. A. is trying certain meat substitutes and the use of other vegetables instead of potatoes to meet the rise in the markets. They think, however, that as girls' wages are not increasing proportionately with the cost of living, they will meet the difficulty in time by calling for outside help.

Dr. Ferin, president of the Franklin Square House, said:

"We are losing all the time on food. The rise in the price of meat will have to be put up to the trustees when they meet the first of September, with a view either to raising on the price of board or to meeting the difficulty in some other way. But I think a raise in board will be necessary, as a certain standard of diet—a variety of plain, wholesome food—must be maintained, or the girls will feel that they are not being properly fed.

"It is undoubtedly true that certain economies may succeed in a private home, but not when we come to consider four to five hundred people."

Miss Everett, superintendent of the Warren Street Y. W. C. A., said:

"The board of directors may find it necessary to raise on the price of board, as we find that everything from lamb, which is simply out of reach this week, to potatoes, flour and sugar, are so much higher than they were a year ago. There is no item that does not show an increase. Cabbages are a luxury.

"Unfortunately, the girls do not get any increase in wages to meet the difference."

Eat Beans Now Beef Is Sky High, Advises Wiley's Successor

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Dr. R. E. Doolittle, successor to Dr. Harvey Wiley, has put his stamp of approval on Boston baked beans and make them equal with beef.

"Beef is sky high. Then eat beans," says Dr. Doolittle.

Commenting upon the boosting of beef prices by the Chicago packers he says:

Beans are the best substitute for beef. One should not eat meat, anyway, more than once daily, depending, of course, upon the physical condition and employment of the person. Hard workers need more meat than those in sedentary work. It seems to me the harder a man works and the lower his wages the more meat he needs. Meat is protein. Protein is strength.

But beans are high in protein percentage. Other good substitutes for meat of high protein value are peas, all kinds of nuts, cheese and milk.

Mind you, I'm not recommending a vegetarian diet as the only best diet, but as substitutes for meat. Sugar, too, is beatiful. Oatmeal contains some fat, but breakfast foods generally are merely starchy.

If fish cannot be considered meat I would recommend fish as a substitute for meat, but generally fish prices follow those of meat.

Beans and peas are the best of all for meatless meals, but eat meat once a day if your stomach and pocket book feel like it.

Remarkable Career of Gov. Pothier, Who Will Edit Tomorrow's American

From Canadian immigrant to Governor of the State of his adoption.

From bank clerk to the presidency of one of the three largest banking institutions in Rhode Island.

From penniless lad to the treasurership of four large manufacturing establishments.

This is brief, outlines the political and business career of the Hon. A. J. Pothier, four times elected Governor of Rhode Island and whose his party is expected to nominate in October for a fifth term—the first two-year term under the new amendment to the State's constitution. Governor Pothier is the author of the leading editorial in tomorrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

Born in the Province of Quebec fifty-eight years ago the 26th of last month, the son of an artisan, Aram J. Pothier came to Rhode Island in the year 1870 with his father, the late Jules Pothier, and his mother, who is now living with the Governor at the age of eighty-five.

Locating in the city of Woonsocket with his parents, young Pothier secured a position in 1874, through the instrumentality of its treasurer, the late Congressman Latimer Wilgrife Ballou, as clerk in the Woonsocket Institution for Savings. Since that time his progress in the bank has been steadily toward the top.

For years he has been a leading spirit in the bank, with large and varied responsibilities. His thousands of patrons have been in almost daily contact with Mr. Pothier. He has been looked upon by men, women and children of three generations as a friend and safe adviser upon all financial matters, particularly those connected with their deposits and investment through the bank.

ARAM J. POTHIER

His Sound Advice.

His advice has always been sound, for his knowledge was acquired through the school of experience, entered upon in his youth, at a time when his native mind readily grasped the full significance of a proposition and quickly discerned the true from the false—be it reel from the vision ary—in matters of financial policy.

Today the Governor holds the position of vice-president of the Woonsocket Institution for Savings, the bank where he began his life work in the humble capacity of errand boy and clerk. Within the past three months his financial ability has been signally recognized outside his home city by his selection as president of the Union Trust Company of Providence, one of the three largest banking institutions in the State.

Governor Pothier's policy as a banker has been on the line of fostering enterprises of an industrial nature rather than a speculative one. That he has always strongly advocated the rendering by his bank of financial assistance for the building of homes by people in humble circumstances, and the encouragement of local enterprise and genius by recording financial support at home rather than applying the bank's resources to the development of distant undertakings. He has found that such a policy was not only good for the bank, but that it made for a better community by encouraging thrift.

A Hard Worker.

He has given his personal supervision to matters of this character assiduously and continually. Nine o'clock in the morning has always found him at the bank. The closing hour has seen him still at the counter of his desk, attending to the details of business which he is able to dispatch with surprising rapidity.

His public career began in 1885, when he was elected a member of the school committee for three years. In 1887 and 1888 he was chosen representative from Woonsocket to the General Assembly.

In 1889, the late Governor Taft appointed Mr. Pothier commissioner from Rhode Island to the Paris Exposition. At the inauguration of the Woonsocket city government in 1889 he was elected city auditor and member of the school committee. He held the former position until he was chosen Mayor, which office he held in 1894 and 1895.

In 1897 he was chosen Lieutenant-Governor and served one year, retiring to make way for the nomination of the late William Gregory, afterwards Governor, for the second time on the ticket.

In 1900 Governor Dyer appointed Mr. Pothier again as commissioner to the Paris Exposition.

What He Accomplished Abroad.

While he was abroad Governor Pothier was always looking for opportunities to advance the industrial standing of his city and State. As a result of his industry, before, during and after the tenure of his commissionership in Paris, Woonsocket is now one of the world's centres for the manufacture of woolen and worsted yarns by the French combing processes. He induced the Lafayette Worsted Company's big yarn plant in Woonsocket, was the instrument that first brought the Bibergeisen Combing Company to Pawtucket, to locate the great French worsted yarn mills in Woonsocket, and also was the factor that brought the Dessurmont worsted yarn mills to that city and State.

It is doubtful if any other Governor Pothier's efforts in bringing new industries to Woonsocket, the aggregate annual pay rolls of the factories of that city have increased probably a million and a half.

Always an advocate of tax exemption as a means of inducing new industries to locate here, Governor Pothier, during his administration as head of the executive department, secured tax exemption for any plants in which he is personally interested. He is president of the Goodyear Spinning Company, the Alsace Worsted Company, the Bernon Woolen Company and the Rosemont Dyeing Company. These industries make him one of the largest depositors that the banks of Woonsocket have.

Remarkable Combination.

In Governor Pothier there is the remarkable combination of the successful banker trained in the details of the business, the successful manufacturer and the man of the people who has been the financial mentor for three generations of patrons of the banking institution to which he has devoted the greatest part of his life.

Ten years after his retirement as Lieutenant-Governor, and following the development of his manufacturing interests in Woonsocket, Mr. Pothier became talked of in the press and in political circles as the man who would best represent the political interests of Rhode Island and of its cosmopolitan population as the candidate for his party for the office of Governor.

His nomination was followed by his election by over seven thousand plurality. The following year he was re-elected by the largest plurality ever given a candidate of any party for the office of Governor in the history of the State.

His administration of his office was so marked by impartiality and fairness, and his insight into the affairs of State became so keenly developed, that he was re-elected for a third and then for a fourth time.

Results of His Administration.

The history of Rhode Island legislation for the past three years is the history of the administration of Governor Pothier's political policies. Conservative and cautious in his advocacy of reforms in the Constitution and in the government, he is, his friends say, the best type of a progressive. He has discovered, with rare acumen, they declare, the needs of his State. His clear and intelligent discussions have won for him the support of the people and of the Legislature, and have gained for the State in the past three years, the Governor's supporters believe, a reputation for progressive and sound legislation and constitutional reform which has attracted widespread attention beyond its borders.

His advocacy of employers' liability and workmen's compensation act resulted only year in the passage of the Beecham bills, while his declaration against pernicious lobbying in his message to the General Assembly of 1912 bore fruit in the enactment of an anti-lobbying law.

The Grand Trunk Railway system, when it sought to gain an entrance for its lines into Rhode Island, found in Governor Pothier a warm champion, and one of the most important official acts that he has performed was placing his signature on the charter of the Southern New England Railway Company, on April 12, 1910.

The biennial election amendment to the constitution was adopted upon his recommendation. The adoption of a modern system of State and local taxation and the creation of a State tax department are the work of his hands.

The establishment of a public utilities commission and of a board of control and supply, charged with the making of contracts for all State departments, were the result of definite suggestions in his messages to the General Assembly. And what is probably of more interest to the people of his State at large, he has this year succeeded in securing the sanction of the Legislature to a proposition for a constitutional convention in 1915 and for a revision of the constitution by a competent commission to be prepared in advance, either for adoption by the convention or by popular vote at the polls.

INVITES BOWLES TO HEAR RACKET

Mrs. Ella I. Newcomb of Quincy, the woman who sank the wharf at the Fore River shipbuilding plant, where they build dreadnoughts and other warships, is exhausted and upset by the noise of riveting machines near her home, according to her mother, Mrs. William Woodbury. Mrs. Woodbury invites Rear-Admiral Francis T. Bowles, head of the company, to come to the house and see how he likes the racket.

The injunction petition brought by Mrs. Newcomb in Norfolk Superior Court at Dedham against the Fore River company attracted more than usual interest on account of the battleship contracts that might be hampered if the company has to shut down or move its boiler shop.

The Argentine battleship Rivadavia is being completed at Fore River. A new United States scout cruiser may be delayed, it is said, if the company is enjoined from operating its boiler plant in its present location near Mrs. Newcomb's home on East Howard street.

Treasurer Sedgwick of the company argues that 200 men will be put out of work if the injunction is carried out.

Meanwhile Mrs. Newcomb, according to her mother, is too ill to see anyone on account of the fearful din from the boiler shop.

The boiler shop was erected two years ago. The neighbors thought it was to be used for repair work and not for a boiler shop.

Mrs. Woodbury says:

"Why it's impossible to stand the noises! Your nerves will go to pieces. My husband built this house forty years ago and it is our home and we do not want to leave it.

"I wonder how Mr. Bowles would like to live here? Let him come down here and hear this noise. We do not want to make any trouble, but we feel that we have some rights in this matter.

"It is just simply terrible to have that thing going all the time. It is impossible to hear anything unless you shout it.

"We do not want to stop the works by the injunction, but there is a safe place for these boiler works to be placed it might on a different story."

MORE GIRLS IN SWIMMING RACE

Nine more girls have entered for the Boston AMERICAN'S second annual swimming race for the girl championship of New England.

This great swimming event is to be held Saturday afternoon, August 10, at 2:30, in the Charles River Basin. That is where the AMERICAN'S race for girls was held last year. The nine new entries are:

Emmeline Frederick, Albemarle Chambers, Back Bay.

Alice Meighan, No. 555 Boylston street.

Sara Levy, care of Jordan Marsh Co.

Louise Fay, No. 384 Freeport street, Dorchester.

Della Lavery, No. 18 Soley street, Charlestown.

Helen Harrington, No. 128 Cypress street, Brookline.

Marion Woodside, No. 96 Freeport street, Dorchester.

Lena Raven, No. 53 Lisbon street, Providence, R. I.

Constance McKay, No. 45 Crescent avenue, Revere.

Interest in this splendid contest grows as the date approaches. Last year 75,000 spectators lined the banks of the river and the Beacon street esplanade, cheering the girls on. Prizes are the same two contested for the AMERICAN'S five cup prizes.

There will be much larger field this year. Nearly all last year's starters are entered for the 1912 swim. And many additional stars have sent in entries.

This girls' championship race is endorsed by the Metropolitan Park Commission, by Mayor Fitzgerald, by municipal and other athletic instructors and by all interested in girls' sports and in the use of the beautiful Charles River Basin.

They will select a new road through Westchester and Connecticut to New Haven, run parallel with the Boston Post Road, which will be closed shortly for reconstruction.

While entour the party will have a conference with James H. MacDonald of Hartford, Frank Kemp of the Massachusetts Highway Commission at Springfield and Thomas W. Symon, the new member of the Massachusetts Highway Commission, who lives at Pittsfield.

The American sporting public has been clamoring for a white hope, and it now looks as if he will come out of the automobile trade. P. E. Hawley, Tom Glenn and Vic Cramer have announced that they have found a wonder. Great secrecy is being maintained about the white hope, but at a recent preliminary bout held down on the South Shore it developed that John Mowe is the man of the hour. No other candidate of prominence in the sporting world is Eddie Switzer.

Our old friend, Myron Townsend, who used to write sporting paragraphs for Boston newspapers and make people sit up and take notice of his scintillating pen, is now associate editor of the Timken Roller Bearing Magazine. He has gotten out a sporting extra in connection with the magazine that shows that Myron has not lost his grasp on things sporting. It is an attractive little sheet and worthy of Myron's pen.

Vic Cramer, who has been handling the Flanders Electric line in New England, will sever his connection with that company today and leave for Detroit, where he is to engage in the automobile accessory business. In the short stay in Boston Mr. Cramer has made many friends, and has put over a number of orders for these classy looking electrics.

$100 IN GOLD FOR KEEN EYES

Keen eyes will bring to some AMERICAN reader $100 in gold tomorrow afternoon.

For those who really see the task should be a simple one. A woman whose picture you will find in today's AMERICAN will keep an appointment with AMERICAN readers tomorrow.

At a time and place designated she will stroll along the streets mentioned IN PLAIN VIEW. And she will make no attempt to hide. Eyes that are keen will have plenty of opportunity to earn $100 for their owner.

"The Lady with the White Parasol" will stroll along Ocean avenue, the Boulevard and the beach from Cunliffe's Bathhouse to Revere street, between 2 and 5 p. m. tomorrow afternoon.

The man, woman or child who identifies her while she is walking on the streets mentioned will receive from her a Boston AMERICAN order for $100.00 in gold.

The only requirement is that the person who identifies "The Lady with the White Parasol" have in his or her hand, in plain sight, a copy of tomorrow's Sunday AMERICAN, and shall say to her: "You are the Lady with the White Parasol."

To simplify the search for "The Lady with the White Parasol," signs will be displayed at "The Dragon's Gorge" (near Cunliffe's; at the Hippodrome (near the bath house); and on the balcony of "The Nautical Ballroom." These signs will indicate where she is at the time the sign is displayed, and will also announce her capture when made, thereby avoiding further search.

ARREST MAN IN "MONA LISA" SEARCH

PARIS, Aug. 3.—Le Journal today says an unknown called Thursday at the British Embassy in Paris with a picture which is supposed to be the missing "Mona Lisa," the masterpiece of Leonardo da Vinci, which disappeared from the Louvre last August. The man returned to the embassy Friday and was given the picture, but on leaving the building was arrested. Today the picture was pronounced to be nothing but a copy of the famous painting.

SEEK TYPICAL BATHING GIRL

Watch out, girls, at Revere Beach today! The AMERICAN camera men are on the hunt for the typical "New England Bathing Girl," so that if you go in the water at Revere either this afternoon or tomorrow afternoon, just as likely as not your picture will be in the AMERICAN Sunday or Monday.

Not one person in a thousand knows what the typical "New England Bathing Girl" looks like. But the typical New England Bathing Girl is among us every day in the week. Revere Beach is the mecca for bathing girls from every corner of New England. The AMERICAN will try to find out what the one of all most typical looks like.

The AMERICAN'S photographers will visit Revere Beach this afternoon and tomorrow afternoon. They will "snap" hundreds of pictures of different "types" in an effort to find the one of all most typical.

The ones closest to be the most typical of New England bathing girls will be reproduced in the AMERICAN. The most typical of Saturday's snapshots will be printed in Sunday's AMERICAN and the most typical of Sunday's snapshots will be printed in Monday's AMERICAN.

Each girl whose picture is printed will be given an award of a $10 gold piece, when called for at the Promotion Department, Wilgrim square.

So—watch out, bathing girls!

POLICE BELIEVE MISS SNODGRASS TOOK OWN LIFE

MT. VERNON, N. Y., Aug. 3.—While the question whether Miss Dorcas I. Snodgrass, the Mt. Vernon Hospital nurse, was murdered or committed suicide at Catskill, is an open one, it has been pretty well established that she died about 4:30 o'clock on the morning following her disappearance from her home in Mt. Vernon.

Miss Snodgrass's watch stopped at 5:01, it is asserted by jewelers it could not have run more than an half hour in the water. This would fix the time of her death at 4:30 o'clock. Besides the analysis of the food in her stomach shows she had eaten ten hours previous to her death.

The police say these deductions point to suicide. They believe the young woman left the boat and in the dawn walked to where she was found or near there and waded into the water.

SEEKS TO RECOVER $450 FROM HIS WIFE

Joseph Feidstein, a Boston manufacturer, has brought suit in the Superior Court against his wife Rose to recover $450, which he says he gave her to deposit in a bank for him. He claims she deposited the money under the name of Rose Field, and asks an injunction to prevent her withdrawing and squandering the money. Judge Pierce issued an order of notice returnable on Wednesday, when the motion for the injunction will be heard.

RED SOX RILEY'S COLUMN PILGRIMS

THE panic that followed the announcement that Joe Wood's arm had gone back subsided today when Joe turned over his 2-0 game against St. Louis —the three-hit game—as evidence that that good right arm was as husky as ever and that Joe was improving every day, as pointed out in this column a week ago. Wood had an offday last Sunday, but the fact was that Joe has been "letting down" lately, so as to be sure to hold out to the end of the season, and a possible world's series, and Sunday he "let down" too much. The reason given was that he had a cold in his arm, but the "cold" must have vanished suddenly when he reached St. Louis.

HERE'S a study in eyes—submitted by a young lady "fan" James McAleer, Melancholy Jacques," who is president of the Red Sox, and James E. Gaffney, who, because he owns the whole outfit all by himself, has just elected himself president of the Pilgrims, both have green eyes. Eyes of that color are so exceptional that the young lady "fan" noticed the coincidence the first time she saw Magnate Gaffney.

THIS is what she says about the "sea-shore lamps":

Is there anything in the chances of the Boston teams indicated by the fact that the two presidents—Gaffney and McAleer—both have green eyes?

It's an odd coincidence, don't you think? The color is so rare. I have usually noticed that persons with green eyes should not be trusted too much and that they are usually self-centered and undependable. Maybe the other fellow doesn't stand a ghost of a chance with them in the matters of sentiment, because they have none. They are usually cold and all business clear through, and get away with what they start after, but the other fellow needn't expect any mercy. Wonder if that means two pennants for Boston?

"HEINIE" WAGNER'S feat (no pun intended) of blocking off second base so that the runner can't touch the bag, even if he beats the ball, has given the Red Sox captain a pair of much-bruised and torn hoofs. Which has moved a Brooklyn real estate man who sees every Red Sox game to have a specially constructed pair of thin-lined shoes made for "Heinie." These shoes are so built as to be both pliable and as protective as armor plate. They are designed to help the Red Sox win the world's championship. When he wears them, Wagner will have no reason to fear the Giants' marvellous base-runners.

ONE of them runs a first-place team and the other runs a tail-end team, and if the young lady "fan" can see any resemblance between the two accomplishments which she regards as the ruling traits of the presidents' eyes, she is more occult than the writer.

HAVE you noticed the evolution of the little brush with which the umpire occasionally dusts off the home plate? They began with a broom—the kind your farmily wields. The catchers used to stumble over the broom, so they cut off most of the handle. Still the implement was too cumbersome and Jack Sheridan, dean of the umpires, adopted the whisk broom—the kind the barber's boy uses to coddle you out of a dime. That, too, was too large, so the latter-day generation of indicator men adopted the little wisp that women use to remove specks from the commutation trains. Even that gets to the way sometimes, so Umpire Johnstone of the National League, who is officiating in the Pilgrims-Pirates series, brought into play this week a tiny paint brush, which he draws from his hip pocket, laboriously dusts off the plate and returns to its hiding place. The shaving brush should come next.

THE only short men who survive in big league baseball are the second basemen. Witness Huggins of the Cardinals, Knabe of the Phillies and McCarthy of the Pirates, who is now giving an exhibition at the South End Park. Men built close to the ground can make use of their lack of size at the keystone station, but in no other place on the diamond is a short stature available in these strenuous and exacting days.

HERE'S an odd difference between the battle cries of the Red Sox and Pilgrims leaders.

While "Heinie" Wagner shouts: "Take your time! Take your TIME!"

An outsider might believe, from the relative standing of the teams, that it's time to step up. An insider knows that what the Pilgrims lacked and what Kling has gradually developed is speed, while the Red Sox—known for years as "the Speed Boys"—had a tendency to play too fast, and their speed led to errors which are avoided when they obey Wagner's injunction to "take your time."

SOMERVILLE TO SEE TITLE GAME

The Bennett A. A. and Somerville H. C. meet in the first of a three-game series at the city field today for the championship of Somerville and a purse of $200.

The series is attracting no end of interest in Somerville. Both nines have large followings and it is expected that a record-breaking crowd will be on hand to witness the battle.

Many of the "fans" are expecting a pitchers' duel between Martin of the Bennetts and "Art" Graham, the Somerville twirler. Martin is a porsider and delights in getting his batsmen on strikes, while Graham also has a good strike-out record this season.

Connell, the Bennetts' catcher, will be unable to play. He split his finger in the Northwesterns game two weeks ago, and, although he played last Saturday, his finger is still causing him some pain. Gebhart, the old Acme catcher, will take his place behind the bat.

Pete McLoughlin, who has umpired in the Suburban School League this season, will officiate at the game.

RED SOX FORM PLEASES STAHL

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 3. — Manager Stahl of the Red Sox is confident that his team has recovered from its batting slump and has regained its old form and from now on will continue winning regularly.

The Bean Boys recovered nicely in the third game with the Browns yesterday, making twelve hits off Earl Hamilton and Jack Powell. Five of them were doubles and two home runs, one of the four-baggers coming with the bases loaded.

The anxiety of the Red Sox leader was relieved much when Joe Wood got back to the firing line. Wood has been suffering from a sore arm and it was feared he would be unable to pitch for some time, but such was not the case as he was back on duty yesterday and pitched great ball, just three singles coming off him.

Pilgrims and Pirates Play Double-Header

The Pilgrims and Pirates will indulge in a double-header at the Walpole street grounds this afternoon and during the eighteen innings of play the local players expect to be able to send at least one run across the pan.

For two days now, the Pilgrim swatters have not seen home—so there is hope that they will get their wish today.

Hub Perdue and Babe Adams are likely candidates for a pitching duel in one of the games. Lefty Tyler is apt to be seen in the other for the Pilgrims, while Manager Clarke may send Marty O'Toole back at the locals again.

Yesterday's game was without a feature, except that the Pilgrims almost scored in the seventh, when Titus lead off with a double and reached third on Derrin's single, where he was stranded on Kling hitting into a double play.

DURNAN AFTER TITLE.

TORONTO, Ont., Aug. 3.—Edward Durnan, champion sculler of America, has returned from Rainy River, where he defeated Herbert on Wednesday. He announced that he was ready to make a match with Barry, the world's champion, the race to take place this Fall on the Thames. Durnan is prepared for the usual stakes.

Two City Meets for Juvenile Athletes

This afternoon the record set of the Summer games for the boys of Boston will be held, one at Wood Island Park and the other at Franklin Field.

A new feature has been added, as the boys who are entered in the events which call for great exertion will have to undergo a physical examination at the hands of a physician appointed by the Municipal Athletic Association.

Instructor Hacea will be in charge of the games at Wood Island Park, while John D. O'Reilly will manage the games at Franklin Field.

A large entry list has been received for both events and an interesting set of games is expected. They will start at 2:15 p. m.

The winners in today's meets will receive first, second and third prizes and will be eligible to compete in the final meet, which will be held on August 21 at Franklin Field.

Praise for Yankee Rifle Team in Sweden

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Robert M. Thompson, president of the Olympic games committee at Stockholm, writing to Beekman Winthrop, acting Secretary of the Navy, says of the American officers in the rifle and fencing teams:

"Lieutenant Osborne especially distinguished himself. In one contest he made nineteen consecutive 'bullseyes.' The twentieth shot could not be found on the target and it was marked as a nine. This must have been due to a defective cartridge or to the shot having passed through one of the other holes without leaving a trace. The team was ably led by Lieutenant-Commander Lining. The King took occasion to come to the field on purpose to see our men shoot. Splendid."

"Young Larimer, who came to the team from the Naval Academy, has done remarkably well. He is an officer of unusual promise, and I am sure the experience he has had on the trip will be of great service to him. The navy may well be proud of every man that has represented her at the fifth Olympiad."

Harvard Drops Track Meet With Dartmouth

Negotiations for dual meets between Harvard and Cornell to take the place of those between Harvard and Dartmouth, have been practically completed by W. F. Garcelon, Harvard's graduate treasurer.

In acknowledging yesterday the truth of a report to that effect, Garcelon said that he wished to emphasize one point, namely, that the substitution of Cornell for Dartmouth on Harvard's schedule would indicate no interruption of the friendly relations between Harvard and Dartmouth, but that the change would be in line with what he understands to be Harvard's athletic policy, that of having no permanent dual agreement with any college except Yale.

"Nothing has been decided," said he, "and nothing can be determined until the matter has been passed upon by the athletic committee of Harvard.

"If the suggested plan is carried out, there would probably be a two-year agreement with Cornell for track meets and cross-country runs. The whole matter is still being talked over with Cornell and Dartmouth men."

Welch Refuses to Act as Referee for Attell

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 3.—Jack Welch, the western referee, will not officiate in the Abe Attell-Tommy Murphy match here this afternoon. Welch declined to give his reasons for turning down the job.

Jim Griffin, matchmaker and promoter of the Broadway A. C. of this city, will act, if Attell is a decisive winner he will leave tomorrow for the East in quest of a match with Packy McFarland.

Abe, now being a full-fledged lightweight, says he can trim the Chicago boy, and a win from Packey will give him the Thanksgiving Day date with Wolgast.

Abe declares Jim Corbett has promised him the match if he can go East and beat McFarland.

Rubinstein's Defeat Places Him Third

BRESLAU, August 2.—Another sensation was furnished in the pending international chess masters' tournament by the defeat of A. K. Rubinstein, the Russian champion, at the hands of N. L. Lowtsky, of Leipsic, in the fourteenth round.

The Russian's misfortune omitted both Dr. Tarrasch and Teichman to pass him and assume the lead, each with a score of 10 to 4 to his credit.

Marshall, the United States champion, was pitted against Duras, of Prague, and the latter proved his master.

The game between Breyer and Barasz, adjourned from the twelfth round, has been recorded as drawn.

After the fourteenth round the standing of the contestants was as follows:

| | Won. | Lost. | | Won. | Lost. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Tarrasch | 10 | 4 | Cohn | 6½ | 7½ |
| Teichmann | 10 | 4 | Lewitzky | 6½ | 7½ |
| Rubinstein | 9½ | 4½ | Burn | 6 | 8 |
| Schlechter | 9½ | 4½ | Mieses | 6 | 8 |
| Duras | 9 | 5 | Schlemann | 6 | 8 |

| Breyer | 8 | 6 | Perlmutter | 4½ | 9½ |
| Praszinska | 7 | 7 | Bella | 4 | 10 |

In the fifteenth round, the masters are pitted in the following order:

Tarrasch vs. Marshall; Lowitzky vs. Teichmann; Rubinstein vs. Schlechter; Marshall vs. Praszinska; Teichmann vs. Burn; Barasz vs. Mieses; Breyer vs. Schlechter; Bella vs. Lowitzky.

C. James Connelly of this city and Fred R. Killeen of New York were elected directors.

The stock of Mr. Carroll of New York has been purchased by Mr. Gaffney. The newly elected president will take up his residence in this city at once and make it his home in the future.

President Gaffney has decided to retain Johnny Kling as manager.

World Series Vote Standing Tomorrow

Tomorrow is the day!

Every candidate in the AMERICAN'S World's Series Contest will want to order his Sunday AMERICAN early to get the first vote standing in the contest.

The work you have been doing will show up plainly in this first printed list. There is no dodging—if you have been active, your standing will show it—if not, it will show that also.

The first milestone in the World's Series journey has been reached.

The last candidate in tomorrow's list can be a winner with the right kind of effort. The race has just started and the tailenders tomorrow are apt to be the leaders in the next list or at the finish.

So examine tomorrow's standing, see what you have done, but, more important, see what you can do.

The twentieth prize is just the same as the first, and any candidate who really means business can be landed a final winner if he or she will but start now and get in the race in earnest.

O'TOOLE SOME GOLFER.

Marty O'Toole, the $22,500 pitcher, and "Ham" Hyatt, the utility outfielder of the Pittsburgh Club, proved to members of the Aronimink Golf Club recently that they can play golf as well as baseball. They negotiated the difficult West Philadelphia course twice, and the scores were a surprise to members of the club who followed them.

RAIN STOPS RACES.

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 3.—While the horses were on the track yesterday working out for the grand circuit events on the card for the day, a sudden downpour of rain and hail sent them scurrying to the stables, rearranged the course into a bog and caused announcement of postponement until today.

How to Have Beautiful Tresses

MISS DIANA OSTE.

(One of the Ziegfeld beauties in "The Winsome Widow" Co.)

By DIANA OSTE

QUITE a lot of people have asked me what I do to keep my hair looking so well, and to make it grow so long.

Now, I can't say that I had anything to do in making it grow long. My hair always was healthy and strong, and it's only since I've been on the stage that I realize that you have to care for your hair if you want to keep it in good condition.

The heat of the dressing rooms, the paint and powder and the quantity of cold cream one uses, all have their effect on the scalp, and they are not good for the hair any more than is dust or other substances which clog the pores of the scalp.

The hair of the modern girl really does not get enough ventilation, and I believe that is one reason why there are so few fine heads of hair, such as we are told women used to have in generations past.

In the first place, sunshine is an absolute necessity for the hair, especially if it is light or has golden or reddish glints in it. You can notice right away the difference in the color of the hair of a blonde if after a period of long confinement in the house she spends a whole day in the sunshine without a hat on.

Whenever I get the chance I ventilate my hair, taking out all the hairpins and letting it down, running my hands through it, so that the air gets to the roots. If I have the good fortune to be in the country, I don't wear a hat at all, but go about with my hair hanging, letting the wind and sunshine act as beauty agents.

The Open Air

One day in the open air will lighten the hair up wonderfully, and the blonde who can stay out of doors will never need the aid of the peroxide bottle. But, of course, to lighten up the hair in this natural way, you must let it down and brush and comb it frequently, so that the light and the air will get to all parts of it.

Bathing in salt water and then drying the hair in the strong sun will also lighten it considerably, but you must be sure and not try it too often, or the hair will become brittle and break off.

So many people have brittle hair that it's no wonder people who sell brilliantine make fortunes at it.

I have my own special way of oiling my hair, and though I don't do it very often, I do it very thoroughly, as you will see. Whenever I have a vacation, especially if that vacation occurs in Summer time, I get ready a couple of little caps and, taking a bottle of good cocoanut oil, I go away to the country or some place where my friends are not likely to see me. There I simply saturate my hair with the oil, rubbing it thoroughly into the scalp and into the ends of the hair as well. When it is quite drenched I braid it in two braids, wind it round my head and put a cap of net over the hair so that it won't look unpleasant or come down.

Whenever I can conveniently do so without startling the neighborhood, I sit out in the open air and take the cap off and ventilate the hair and scalp. At night I wear a little cap of silklin to protect the pillow, and I leave this oil on for at least a week and sometimes two. Then when I am ready to come away, I shampoo my hair thoroughly with hot soapsuds made from soap bark, and dry it in the sun. For months it keeps a beautiful gloss, due to the thorough oiling it received, and I never have to do a thing to it.

I find that if I worry much, or am ill or dispirited, my hair shows it almost immediately, and has to be oiled again, though not so thoroughly, of course, as during vacation time.

Lots of times hair that is a little oily will get thoroughly straight because it lacks nourishment and oil, and a little hair tonic or cocoanut oil will restore the curl.

I told a girl to sun and ventilate her hair and she went out and sat in the sun so long that she sunburned her scalp. It was very painful, and besides it faded her hair. When you air your crowning glory, as the beauty books call it, don't sit in the broiling sun unless you have plenty of hair to cover your scalp with. Where the hair is thin, the skin is likely to be badly burned.

One of the worst things for the hair is the small modern hat. No ventilation gets in, and after this fashion changes I know the bald-headed will reap their reward, for almost every one will need false hair.

Careful Brushing

I have always found that when the hair falls out too much it is due to two things, indigestion or not enough shampoos. I have never failed to remedy the trouble myself immediately by trying both cures. Of course, it's awfully hard to shampoo long hair one's self, but when there is no hairdresser handy, I can do mine quite well by braiding it in two braids, and washing one braid at a time.

Often it is very difficult to keep one's hair in good order and the scalp clean, especially "on the road." At such times I make up for it by brushing my hair about twice as much as I would ordinarily do and by keeping my brushes very clean. I always have two hair brushes, one wire one for brushing out tangles, and the other a bristle brush for polishing and oiling the hair. The reason why most brushing is virtually useless is because the brushes are not kept clean enough, and one is just brushing the dust in again.

When you are brushing your hair to clean it, rub the scalp over with a clean towel or a piece of linen. If the hair is very dusty, dip the linen in bay rum and rub the scalp thoroughly. You can use a soft tooth brush, if you prefer. This will keep the scalp in good condition even if you have to let it go several weeks without shampooing the hair, and it's a good way to do when you are ill and not able to have your head washed.

WHO WILL WIN THIS BEAUTY PRIZE?

The offer of a $2,500 a week theatrical engagement to the most beautiful woman in America is attracting the attention of every pretty girl who has the ambition to go on the stage.

SEE SUNDAY'S AMERICAN.

Like Life

The old lady entered the taxidermist's shop in a blaze of wrath, carrying a defunct cockatoo in a glass case.

"You can see for yourself, sir. You only stuffed my poor parrot in the Winter, and here's his feathers tumbling out before your eyes."

"Bless ye'm; that's the triumph of the art! We stuff 'em that natural that they moults in their proper season."

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"I SEE that Miss Helen Gould has come out strong in favor of the old maids," said the Manicure Lady. "She thinks that nobody ought to attack them, because so many of them are noble women. She said in an article she wrote that if she had found a suitable husband she would never had a chance to spend so much of her money as wisely as she has. There may be a good deal in that, George."

"That sounds as if she didn't have had to stake her husband every week or so, if she found a suitable one," said the Head Barber. "I don't see how she could blame anybody but herself if she had married a man that couldn't support the two of them, the way some folks in her set happened to do. Any girl that lets a man marry her for her money, giving nothing back except a showdown crown or coat of arms, oughtn't to squeal. If she had found a suitable husband in the shape of some good, solid American business man like her brother George, I guess she would have had as much money and as much time to devote to charity as she has. Not that she ain't a grand woman. I know all about all the swell gifts she has made. I guess everybody in America is proud that she is an American girl, married or not."

"That's what brother Wilfred was saying up to the house last night," said the Manicure Lady. "Wilfred thinks the world of her ever since the time he wrote a poem about one of her big gifts and mailed it to her. I don't remember much of it, except the finish. 'Oh, thou great benefactress, thou art greater than an actress.' He got an answer to it when he mailed it to her. The answer was wrote by her private secretary, and said that the receipt of the letter and poem was acknowledged. That's all the letter said, but my poor brother, slap that he is, thinks as much of that letter as if Miss Gould had wrote it herself and enclosed a money order, which I thought at the time was what Wilfred was kind of fishing for.

"But getting back to the old maid part of the thing, George, I don't think anybody ought to be too hard on old maids. Their lives ain't none too full of sunshine, as they go along on their own little lonesome way, with nothing but cats and parrots to kiss away them unavailing tears that springs unbidden from the heart. I wouldn't have a cat kiss away any tears of mine, goodness knows, because I never liked cats since I got to be a light sleeper and moved into a neighborhood where the cats have their conventions. And as for parrots kissing away tears from my eyes, with them awful beaks of theirs, there wouldn't be a chance in the world for me considering it. I think too much of my eyes to have them kissed by a parrot's beak.

"No, George, you can't make me believe that folks ought to feel cold toward old maids. Love is a woman's whole existence, as the poet Oliver Wordsworth said. The happiest women in the world is the woman that marries the gent she loves, even if she might have a shy bankroll when she wants to go shopping. I got your standing offers, George, and I'm going to grab one of them as soon as me and mother makes up our minds which is the most likely to be the most different husband from father."

Freaks of Fashion

Fibre Muffs and Scarfs

By OLIVETTE

TO take one kind of material and make something entirely different out of it seems to be the great ambition of the modern fashion artist. "Never be what you is, just seem what you ain't," to paraphrase a popular song.

This muff which looks so furry is not of fur, but of braid; and the braid which is so silky and fine isn't silk. It's made of woodpulp. There, I hope that's complicated enough for you. It shows how very hard our fashion artists do try to please.

Silk braid is going to be tremendously popular this season. And you know you can make anything out of silk braid. Even false hair. Many women are wearing switches of this silk hair, which is ever so much more hygienic than ordinary false hair and cannot be told from the real article.

The muff, as you see, is very elaborate, with long streamers and fringe of silk. The fact that the braid is made of wood pulp and fibre makes it less expensive than the real kind and will add to popularize it.

The last of the Summer races have taken place at Longchamps, so the fashions for early Fall are definitely settled. They include the draped and slightly wide skirt, short jackets of contrasting color, usually lighter than the skirt material. The latest jacket is a kind of sack coat which is very smart and can be worn with the short pleated skirts. These skirts retain their narrow lines, despite the pleats, as the latter are sewn down to look very flat.

The general one-sided effect that was a feature of last season's fashions and which was very much overdone is being carefully eliminated by the best Paris dressmakers and lace and other trimming are arranged in a more natural manner. The fichu and the cape effect, however, will be carried over into next season and the cape in all kinds of arrangements will be most popular.

Nothing seems to be able to stop the vogue of black and white; and, indeed, most women find it both becoming and economical. It will continue next Fall, and already the first Autumn hats are appearing in black or white. The white ones are of plush, with lower crowns and large flat brims. Then there are helmet shaped toques with the plume very much to one side and bonnet shaped toques in the Directoire style. These are to be worn with very simple models in velveteen. One of the smartest of these new frocks is of golden brown velveteen bordered with black satin. The foundation is the simple frocks we have seen all Summer. A plain, rather short-waisted dress is buttoned down the front. The back breadth of the velvet is draped at the hem of the gown and the band of black satin goes over the shoulder to the foot of the gown in front and then around the back. There is the flat wide collar of lace over the shoulders and the so-called Robespierre collar besides.

The girl who loves ruffles would be suited with the new fashion, for flounces and ruffles of lace or heavy material are sure to be a feature of the autumn fashions. The dark taffeta dresses which were so much worn in the early Spring days are disappearing from view, while poplins and satins are being made up for smart afternoon dresses.

Fur trims are also in evidence in the latest and is used to trim chiffon dresses. It is sure to be very popular for Fall, especially skunk and ermine. A Callot dress of white satin is one of the handsomest new models; the skirt is made very full and over it is a short tunic of white chiffon, edged with ermine.

Most of the waists are tight fitting, and all the silk dresses have long, tight sleeves. Many of the waist belts are deep and folded to the figure with a sash and long ends behind.

WOOD PULP THAT LOOKS LIKE SILK

Among amusing fashions that were seen at the races was a hat in prune taffeta, corded into the shape of a melon with a plain taffeta border; curling from this border upward and backward from the right side was a wonderful golden paradise plume.

Black velvet hats are worn with lingerie gowns, despite the fact that we still are in the midst of Summer.

Shoe are quite fantastic, most of them being in the same shade as the dress and made of satin, but the fad for white shoes with dark dresses will go well in the Autumn, and probably we will see this piebald effect in the Winter, too.

Hunting a Husband

No. 22—The proposal expected by the widow fails to materialize and she is greatly disappointed

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water.

A LONG letter came by mail for Beatrice as she sat at her breakfast table the following morning.

It was from Sidney Randolph, and enlarged upon his regret at being obliged to send her such a brief note the previous evening. He asked her pardon for what he feared must have seemed to her as brusque and discourteous and ended with a request to be allowed to see her the next afternoon.

"I am sending," the letter ended, "a few flowers as a propitiatory offering to the goddess. May she forgive and be kind."

A little later, when the floming heap of roses was uncovered, the "goddess" felt as much kindness as the sender could possibly have wished.

As Beatrice surveyed the blossoms she appreciated that in the weeks that had passed since she had decided to consider the possibility of a second marriage, and had accepted attentions from eligible men, she had received more gifts of flowers than during all the years of her marriage to Tom and the period of conventional mourning since his death. "Considering men as possible husbands is a rather engrossing and agreeable occupation," she whispered, softly and smilingly, then suppressed the thought sharply. She would not acknowledge even to herself, she determined, that she was hunting a husband. Women do not always call such occupations by their right names.

The following afternoon Sidney Randolph came, immaculate and distinguished in appearance, bringing with him a great bunch of iris—purple and silver blooms upon slender green stalks.

"Oh, how beautiful!" exclaimed Beatrice. "My favorite flower! How did you know that?"

The Same Words

The words were the same with which she had received Maynard's gift of violets several weeks ago, but the present guest was not aware of that, and the woman did not see the humor of the situation.

"I did not know they were your favorites," the donor answered gravely. "They reminded me of you—slim, graceful, chaste, growing in the coarse verge of marshy grounds, but all the more wonderful by their contrast with other plants around them."

Such flattery might have seemed mawkishly sentimental from another speaker, but as Beatrice looked into Randolph's dark eyes the words carried for her the ring of sincerity, and she flushed under the frank look of admiration. In her girlhood she had known other artists, and had regarded with more or less contempt the affectations of their cult. But with Sidney Randolph it was different.

He was well groomed and he dressed according to the fashion of the present day, eschewing soft silk ties and "Lord Fauntleroy" collars, and wearing his dark wavy hair cut short. With him breeding and manner superseded the eccentricities of his profession, and although his handsome, mobile face was a dreamer's, his appearance was always that of an up-to-date man of the world.

The pair sat for a long time over Beatrice's dainty tea table, where the glasses of iced tea were flanked by plates of thin sandwiches and crisp wafers. Before he took his departure, the artist begged his hostess again to be allowed to paint her portrait, but she had already pondered and weighed the proposition, and decided against it, although she had been secretly inclined to gratify her handsome supplicant.

"Dear Mr. Randolph," she said, seriously, "I am not a rich woman. Frankly, I have not the money to spend upon anything so frivolous and extravagant as perpetuating my face upon canvas. Even if I thought my face or figure worthy the honor, my conscience and my duty to my children would not allow it."

The man's instinctive good taste forbade his obeying the impulse to offer to waive the financial consideration, but he sought a compromise.

"Then mayn't I come here often to see you and, perhaps, make a little sketch of you just for my own keeping?"

The subtle flattery of his plea moved the widow.

"You are welcome to come as often as you please, Mr. Randolph," she said, unconsciously imitating in speech and manner the artist's old world grace.

"You are very good to me," he said simply. "Thank you. I shall come often."

Frequent Visits

He did come often—first, twice a week, and then on alternate days. Summer was advancing. The city was, at mid-day, a glaring oven of asphalt and stone.

All of Beatrice's friends were leaving town. Henry Blanchard was to spend his vacation at his factory in Indiana, to be absent for a month or more. He wrote her occasionally, old-fashioned pompous letters which amused her. June was waning into July. Beatrice's engagements were few, and her life was monotonous. She looked forward eagerly to Sidney Randolph's visits.

Sometimes he came in the afternoon, sometimes in the evening, and his presence brought light and happiness into the woman's little home. They had long confidential chats together. Occasionally he would make a sketch of her; oftener, he would lean back idle in an easy chair and talk. He talked much of himself, it is true, but so brightly and wittily that he never wearied his listener. We rarely condemn a friend for discoursing of himself unless his egotism bores us.

And Beatrice—she who had coolly set about months ago hunting a husband, as one might search the intelligence offices for a good domestic—found herself fascinated by this man. He was a clever companion, young, handsome and prosperous. These qualifications set the final seal of her approval upon his suit. She knew that her feeling for him was not the kind that she had given Tom Minor before her ghastly awakening, but Randolph charmed her, and, she decided, if he loved her, she would accept his hand with his heart.

A Change

With all this in her mind she was quick to detect a change in the man's usually happy demeanor when he called one afternoon early in July. He seemed distracted and worried, and soon his speech explained the change that Beatrice had noted.

"You can never know what your companionship, your quick understanding of me and my moods have meant to me through all these weeks that, but for you, would have been wearisome and wearing," he said. "I wish I might make you understand now, for I must take my leave of Boston soon."

Beatrice paled and started, but the man continued.

"I sail for Paris next Monday. Before I go I would like to have you understand what your companionship has meant to me." There was real feeling in his tone. "May I come again tonight and bring with me a little gift as a parting remembrance? I would not return to Boston until September, and meanwhile I want you to think of me—if you will. May I come tonight?"

The woman scarcely recognized her own voice as she gave her consent.

Later, when he had gone with the hopeful words, "Au revoir until evening," the widow stood where he had left her. The world was not home to her were upon the table near her. Suddenly, with a strange thrill and grip at her heart, she stooped and buried her face in their cool fragrance.

GEORGE laughed. He was growing excited, but not altogether agreeably so. He says that he has seen moments of more pleasant anticipation. Evidently, my good husband is not cut out for detective work.

Where they went under this officer's guidance, he cannot tell. The tortuous tangle of alleys through which he now felt himself led was dark as the nether regions to his unaccustomed eyes. There was show under his feet and now and then he brushed against shrouding objects, or stumbled against a low fence; but beyond those slight miscalculations on his own part, he was a mere automaton in the hands of his eager guide, and only became his own man again when they suddenly stepped into an open yard and he could discern vaguely before him the dark walls of a building pointed out by Sweetwater as their probable destination. Yet even here they encountered some impediment which predicated a close approach. A wall or shed cut off their view of the building's lower story; and though somewhat startled at being left unceremoniously alone after just a whispered word of encouragement from the ever ready detective, George could quite understand the necessity which that person must feel for a quiet reconnoitering of the surroundings before the two of them ventured further forward in their possibly hazardous undertaking. Yet the experience was none too pleasing to George, and he was very glad to hear Sweetwater's whisper again at his ear, and to feel himself rescued from the pool of slush in which he had been left to stand.

A Hard Task

"The approach is not all that can be desired," remarked the detective as they entered what appeared to be a low shed. "The broken board has been put back and securely nailed in place, and if I am not very much mistaken there is a fellow stationed in the yard who will want the password too. Looks shady to me. I'll have something to tell the chief when I get back."

"But we? What are we going to do if we cannot get in front or rear?"

"We're going to wait right here in the hopes of catching a glimpse of our man as he comes out," returned the detective, drawing George toward a low window overlooking the yard he had described as untinselled. "He will have to pass directly under this window on his way to the alley," Sweetwater went on to explain, "and if I can only raise it—but the noise would give us away. I can't do that."

"Perhaps it swings on hinges," suggested George. "It looks like that sort of a window."

"If it should—well! it does. We're in great luck, sir. But before I pull it open, remember that from the moment I unlatch it, everything said or done can be heard in the adjoining yard. So no unnecessary whispers and no unnecessary movements. When you hear him coming, as sooner or later you certainly will, fall carefully on your knees and lean out just far enough to catch a glimpse of him before he steps down from the porch. If he stops to light his cigar or to pass a few words with some of the men he will leave behind you may get a plain view of his face or figure to identify him. Your flight is burning low in that rear hall, but it will do. If it does not—if you can't see him or if you do, don't hang out of the window more than a second. Duck after your first look. I don't want to be caught at this job with no better opportunity for escape than we have here. Can you remember all that?"

George pinched his arm encouragingly, and Sweetwater, with an amused grunt, softly unlatched the window and pulled it wide open.

A fine sleet flew in, imperceptible save for the sensation of damp it gave, and the slight haze it diffused through the air. Enlarged by this haze, the building they were set to watch rose in magnified proportions at their left. The yard between, piled high in the centre with snow heaps or other heaps covered with snow, could not have been more than forty feet square. The window from which they peered was half way down this yard, so that a comparatively short distance separated them from the porch where George had been told to look for the man he was expected to identify. All could hear from time to time some sounds of restless movement, as the guard posted inside shifted in his narrow quarters, or struck his benumbed feet softly together.

But what came to them from above was more interesting than anything to be heard or seen below. A man's voice, raised to a wonderful pitch by the passion of oratory, had lured the lurkers at the closed hall in that towering third story and was carrying its tale to other ears than those within. Had it been Summer and the windows open, both George and Sweetwater might have heard every word; for the tones were exceptionally rich and penetrating, and the speaker intent only on the impression he was endeavoring to make upon his audience. That he had not mistaken his power in this direction was evinced by the applause which rose from time to time from innumerable hands and feet. But this uproar would be speedily silenced, and the mellow voice ring out again, clear and commanding. What could the subject be to rouse such enthusiasm in the Associated Brotherhood of the Awl, the Plane and the Trowel?

Scoring the Rich.

There was a moment when one listening friends expected to be enlightened. A shutter was thrown back in one of the upper windows, and the window hurriedly raised, during which words took the place of sounds and they heard enough to whet their appetite for more. But only that. The shutter was speedily reclosed to place, and the window again closed. A wise precaution or so thought George, if they wished to keep their doubtful proceedings secret.

A tirade against the rich and a loud call to battle could be gleaned from the few sentences they had heard. But its virulence and pointed attack was not that of the second-rate demagogue or business agent, but of a man whose intellect and culture rang in every tone, and informed each sentence.

Sweetwater, to whom satisfaction was fast taking the place of impatience and regret, pushed the window too before asking George this question.

"Did you ever hear the voice of the man whose action attracted your attention outside the Clermont?"

"No."

WATCHING THE MURDER SUSPECT.

Sweetwater pulled the window wide open and took a bold look out.
(Posed by Vincent Sullivan (Anderson) and J. H. Duffey (Sweetwater), of "The Rosemaid" Company.)

"Did you note just now the large shadow dancing on the ceiling over the speaker's head?"

"Yes, but I could judge nothing from that."

"Well, he's a rum one. I wasn't open this window again till he gives signs of reaching the end of his speech. It's too cold."

But almost immediately he gave a start, and, pressing George's arm, prepared to listen, not to the speech, which was no longer audible, but to something much nearer—a step or movement in the adjoining yard. At least so George interpreted the quick turn which this impression deserved made, and the pains he took to direct George's attention to the walk running under the window beneath which they crouched. Some one was stealing down upon the house at their left from the alley beyond. A big man, whose shoulder brushed the window as he went by. George felt his hand seized again and pressed as this happened, and before he had recovered from this excitement experienced another quick pressure, and still another, as one, two, three additional figures went slipping by. The big hand was suddenly dropped, for a cry had shot up from the door where the sentinel stood guard, followed by a sudden loud clang and the noise of a shooting bolt, which, proclaiming as it did that the invaders were not friends, but enemies, to the cause which was being vaunted above, so excited Sweetwater that he pulled the window wide open and took a bold look out. George followed his example, and this is what they saw:

Three men were standing flat against the fence leading from the shed directly to the porch. The fourth was crouching within the latter, and in another moment they heard its fist descend upon the door inside in a way to rouse the echoes. Meantime the voice in the audience hall above had ceased, and there could be heard instead the scramble of hurrying feet and the noise of overturning benches. Then a window flew up and a voice called down:

"Who's that? What do you want down there?"

But before an answer could be shouted back this man was drawn fiercely inside, and the scramble was renewed, amid which George heard Sweetwater's whisper at his ear:

"It's the police. The chief has got ahead of me. Was that the man we're after—the one who shouted down?"

"No, Neilner was he the speaker. The voices are very different."

"We want the speaker. If the boys get him we're all right, but if they don't—wait, I must make the matter sure."

And with a bound he vaulted through the window, whistling in a peculiar way. George, thus left quite alone, had the pleasure of seeing his sole protector join with the boys, as he called them, and mutually crowd in with them through the door which had finally been opened for their admittance. Then came a wait, and then the quiet reappearance of the detective alone and in no very amiable mood.

"Well?" inquired George, somewhat breathlessly. "Do you want me? They don't seem to be coming out."

"No; they've gone the other way. It was a red-hot anarchist meeting, and a mistake. They have arrested one of the speakers, but the other escaped. How, we have not yet found out; but I think there's a way out somewhere by which he got the start on us. He was the man I wanted you to see. Bad luck, Mr. Anderson, but I'm not at the end of my resources. If you'll have patience with me and accompany me a little further I promise you that I'll only risk one more failure. Will you be so good, sir?"

Beyond All Explaining

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"A woman's heart is a very queer thing on the whole. It fails in love in the most unaccountable way with the most unaccountable man."—J. G. Holland.

JACK writes the following letter:

"I am eighteen and am keeping company with a girl the same age. I don't care much about her, but she loves me. I am keeping company with other girls, but as she cares so much for me I feel sorry for her and don't know what to do."

Her heart seems to have fallen in love in the most unaccountable way with the most unaccountable man. If she were asked to give an explanation of that love she couldn't give it.

He says he doesn't care much for her. In the same breath he says he is keeping company with her.

The element of gratitude enters into the love of women in a greater degree than any woman will admit. In her deep humility she is pleased that any lord of creation should deign to look upon her, a humility that is greatly encouraged by the lord of creation.

She has an exalted idea of a young man's intelligence, his ability and superiority.

In like proportion she exaggerates her own unworthiness. Naturally, to make a great idol of him she must make a more insignificant worshipper of herself.

If he put her on the pedestal in the first days when he was attracted by her, she soon climbs down in the humility of her love and puts him there.

He thinks it is his rightful place. He has no qualms about his rights to the perch to which her love has exalted him.

He gets so accustomed to the incense she burns at his shrine that it no longer has any existence in his thoughts, and he begins to sniff a lordly nose to get whiffs from the incense other girls are burning.

Gives Him Pedestal

Having made humility her first blunder, she adds the second one of showing him that she CARES.

With jealous eye she notes that lordly nose of his in its evident enjoyment of the scent arising from incense burned by other women. Then, instead of rising from her knees and walking scornfully away, she bows her head to the ground at his feet and wails.

"She cares so much for me," writes Jack, "that I am sorry for her."

If she were a wise little maid she would have kept Jack guessing that she cared for him at all, and then he would have been sorry for himself.

She would have kept him on his knees.

Do You Know That—

In the rural parts of Schleswig-Holstein people do not measure distance by miles, as we do, or by hours, as in other parts of Germany. They say that a place is a pipe, or two pipes or three pipes off, according to the number of pipes one could smoke while walking there. Shorter distances are reckoned by a dogs barking; a village under a mile away would be two or three dogs' barks.

Stock Prices Range Lower at the Close

By W. H. ROSS.

STATE STREET, Aug. 3.—There was a good tone to the Boston market at the opening and it was fairly active with orders well distributed. It stayed strong during the first hour, but before noon most of the leading coppers grew weaker. Among those to end lower were Lake, Butte & Superior, Indiana, North Butte and Granby.

The New York market did not hold its strength during the last hour and fin-ished irregular. Final prices ranged lower. There was heavy selling.

A Houghton dispatch states that the Hancock shaft is now bottomed at a depth of 3,705 feet in a mixed vein in which formation it has been sinking for over five feet. It is believed here that the crosscut at the thirty-fourth level of No. 2 shaft should reach the lode about September 1.

The Boston News Bureau says: "The week closes with the money market firm in time funds the result solely of mercantile borrowing. There is very little demand from speculative sources either on call or time."

American Snuff Goes Up.

American Snuff was the most spectacular feature in the New York market in initial trading, it going 2 points higher. The market was firm at the opening and a number of important issues made fractional gains. The volume of business was moderate. After the first half hour the market became quiet, but maintained the good tone.

During the first hour there was small gains by Steel common, Anaconda, American Can, American Smelting, Amalgamated, Great Northern preferred, St. Paul, Pacific, Reading and the Erie preferred issues.

The Curb was steady.

The London Market was closed, as today is a bank holiday in England.

Violent Break in Cotton.

There was a violent break in the New York cotton market on reports of good rains in Texas. Opening prices were from 10 to 27 points off, and after the start fluctuations were erratic and rapid with long cotton coming out freely on every rally. The market at Liverpool was closed.

THE AMERICAN OFFERS MAYOR $1,000 TO GIVE IN PRIZES TO BOYS AND GIRLS FOR ESSAYS ON BOSTON'S DEVELOPMENT

BOSTON AMERICAN
EVENING AND SUNDAY
OFFICE OF THE PUBLISHER

Boston, Mass., August 2, 1912.

Honorable John F. Fitzgerald,
Mayor of Boston,
Boston, Mass.

Dear Sir:

The Boston American gives unqualified approval to your plan of arousing greater general interest in Boston's business future by offering substantial prizes to students attending colleges and high schools in the Metropolitan District for the best essays on "Boston's Commercial and Industrial Development."

If the Port Directors or the City Council find they have no funds available for the purpose the Boston American hereby offers $1,000.00 to be given as prizes along the lines suggested by you.

A greater understanding and appreciation of Boston's commercial possibilities by our boys and girls at the present time will surely be of immense advantage in the great forward industrial movement now going on. We can conceive of no better method of promoting this knowledge than the plan you suggest. Sincerely yours,

Russell R. Whitman
Publisher, Boston American.

Early declines wiped out all the advances scored yesterday after publication of the government report. Sentiment was unsettled, but generally bearish, on the belief that conditions in the belt had improved materially.

Copper Metal Situation.

There is not much demand for copper metal at the week end, it is stated, but good buying is believed in the trade to be only a question of a few days. Recent sales have not been under 17¾ cents a pound for electrolytic in any instance. Large interests are unplanning to buy ahead at present to selling beyond October. Sales for the first two months in the year have been reported. An advance in the price of electrolytic copper is said to be the purpose to get the benefit of it. The New York Sun says: "The agency which has sold half of its October supply has been refusing to take further orders for deliveries after October 1, deeming it inadvisable to sell further ahead then that because of the likelihood of higher prices in the interim. The sale of 5,000 tons to Europe in addition to some June sales, the lack of foreign interest and small European consumers again in the market, as they will have to be soon, interest will quickly die. It is seen a point for electrolytic according to authorities on the subject. They also insist that sweets residents that there will be a runaway market in copper before long."

The Engineering and Mining Journal estimates the average daily sales for electrolytic at 17,100 tons, which compares with 17,294 tons in June. Lake copper, according to the same compilation, averaged 2,257 tons in June and 17,454 tons in May.

Financial News in Brief.

Frank A. Vanderlip, president of the National City Bank, and who returned to New York today after about a month's visit to Europe, says that England is now doing more business in all lines than for many years.

The cut down of mines in April and May owing to the labor dispute has stopped, and dealers say, a shortage of about 6,500,000 tons in the anthracite supply. It is estimated that the output in September will be 1,500,000 above normal.

Congressman William C. Redfield of Brooklyn, who is an iron manufacturer who wants the tariff revised downward, says: "It is hard to do this when we compete successfully with foreign manufacturers on their own ground, as we need a high protective tariff against them on our own ground. The mill which puts Lancaster and Bombay in successful competition at Aden is not likely to suffer from their competition in North Carolina or New England."

Department of Commerce figures about Great Lake commerce shows a gain for June of almost 30 per cent. in tonnage of domestic shipments over the same month last year.

F. W. Denton, who has resigned as superintendent of the Western Division of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, is to become general superintendent of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad.

Boston, New York and Cleveland capitalists have obtained control of the Telluride Power Company, which has a $20,000,000 plant, with six large power plants in Colorado and Utah.

F. G. Milliken & Company of No. 15 State street, have issued a folder giving high and low prices for July and dividends for August, besides other useful information to investors.

The government crop report for July, which was issued on August 1, says that 78.5 as compared with 80.4 a month ago and 80.1 for the corresponding date last year, when was harvested the record crop of 16,200,000 bales.

New York banks in the past week have gained in cash $5,750,000, which compares with a loss of $2,800,000 in the previous week. The demand for money continues to hold to high figures.

Monuments, Inc., of Boston, says: "The labor situation in the cities is serious, and it is not a question of getting sufficient men to permit of increase in production, but rather keeping the old men and getting new ones to replace for the maintenance of present production. During the last few years of low metal prices and curtailment of production many men were out of employment and have left the trade, and there is little sign of some back to the lathe."

Interborough Rapid Transit started its new fiscal year with a gain in receipts of $5,000 a day or $150,000 for the month of July.

The General Chemical Company's report of earnings for six months ended June 30 shows an increase in net earnings of $120,445, after allowing for a decrease in surplus for that period of $112,072. Net earnings were $1,233,603, equal to 4.93 per cent. on the $25,000,000 preferred stock, and at month's series of $485,260, present total surplus is $4,046,176.

During the first half of this year it is understood that the International Cotton Mills handled gross business of between $7,500,000 and $8,000,000, or at the rate of more than $15,000,000 for the full year.

Earnings of the American Malt Company have so much improved that there is expectation that the preferred dividend rate, now four per cent., will be increased at the September meeting.

RAILROAD BOARD URGES AN INCREASE IN FREIGHT CREWS

Larger freight crews are recommended by the Massachusetts Board of Railroad Commissioners, to take effect September 3. This is the result of an investigation in compliance with an order of the Senate. As a means of protecting the public and insuring the safety of railroad employes the board recommends:

That all freight trains operated on main line tracks and all freight trains operated on branch tracks for a distance of five miles or more shall be provided with at least two brakemen.

That all freight trains propelled by two locomotives for a distance of ten or more miles shall be provided with at least three brakemen.

That all freight trains, while using the opposite main track for the purpose of allowing trains to pass or for the purpose of setting out and taking in cars, where a brakeman is required to protect the opposite track, shall be provided with at least three brakemen.

That all light engines operated for a distance of ten or more miles shall be provided with a brakeman.

COMPROMISE RATES ON MALT SHIPMENTS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—The Interstate Commerce Commission today vacated an order which suspended advances in malt rates on lines operating between Minneapolis, Minn., and Kansas City, Mo. All protests on the part of the shippers have been withdrawn.

SUSPEND ADVANCE IN FREIGHT RATES

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Advances of 15 per cent. in class in commodity rates on all railroads operating in the Central Freight Association territory between points in Illinois and Kentucky were suspended today by the Interstate Commerce Commission until February 18 next. The advances were to have become effective August 18.

BIG ELECTRIC FIRMS IN SUIT

The Gilmore Electric Company brought suit in the United States Court here today against the General Electric Company of Lynn for $3,000,000.

The suit is based on alleged violation of a contract which the Gilmore company says it has with the General Electric Company. The Sherman anti-trust law is also cited as a basis for the suit.

A suit was also filed in the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts today in the same action. In its State court suit the Gilmore Electric Company seeks to compel the General Electric Company to furnish Tungsten lamps to the Gilmore company, in accordance with a contract which the Gilmore company maintains it has.

The Gilmore Electric Company is listed in the Boston directory as dealing in incandescent lamps and water motors at Nos. 625-635 East First street, South Boston.

High Finance in Fall River

The Gas Company in That City, After Dispensing Its Surplus in Extra Dividends, Now Demands the Right to Issue New Stock to Pay Its Debts. If the People of Fall River Are Dissatisfied With the Situation and Want the AMERICAN'S Help They Can Get It.

The Fall River Gas Works Company has been paying 12 per cent. regular dividends on its capital stock. In seven years it has also declared two extra dividends—one of 20 per cent. in July, 1907, and one of 15 per cent. in December, 1910, making a dividend of 30 per cent. for 1907 and 27 per cent. for 1910.

Yet on December 11, 1911, this company owed $200,000 in promissory notes and needed $40,000 more for a new plant. On June 15 of this year this gas company coolly petitioned the Board of Gas and Electric Light Commissioners for permission to issue more than one thousand shares of additional stock for the purpose of paying this indebtedness.

THIS COMPANY COULD HAVE PAID ITS INDEBTEDNESS AND PROVIDED FOR THE ENTIRE COST OF ITS NEW PLANT AND PAID 10 PER CENT. DIVIDENDS IF IT HAD NOT APPROPRIATED TO ITSELF ITS ENTIRE SURPLUS, AMOUNTING TO $241,500.

Ten per cent. is a very liberal profit upon the capital of a public service corporation protected in its monopoly by law. The gas works is not like an ordinary business, which must expect any day to be obliged to compete with a newcomer and must expect a newcomer the moment the profits of its business are divulged. Within its field the Gas Company has a monopoly, and for that reason the risk of investment is nothing compared with the risk which an ordinary business man takes when he enters a business not thus protected from competition by law.

For this reason it is axiomatic that the dividends, which are the profits of these public service enterprises, must tend to seek a level with the market rate of interest upon the use of capital bearing the same character of risk.

Therefore 10 per cent. is a large profit for a gas company to earn—a very large profit. It is astonishing that this Fall River Gas Works Company should have the effrontery to ask the Gas and Electric Light Commissioners for permission to burden the people of Fall River with an issue of stock to meet an indebtedness which it could have met out of its earnings and still have paid 10 per cent. dividends.

The audacious petition of this gas company was dismissed by the Board of Gas and Electric Light Commissioners, but the company has not been chastened by the opinion which the commissioners expressed in their decision that the indebtedness should have been paid out of their excess profits and should not be unloaded upon the people of Fall River.

The Gas Company is now attempting to compel the Gas and Electric Light Commissioners to grant their petition by appealing to the Supreme Court upon technical grounds.

What are the people of Fall River doing in this situation? Have they money to burn, or are they asleep?

The Gas and Electric Light Commissioners have no right on their own initiative to reduce the price of gas in Fall River, even if they know that the price is too high in consideration of the profits which the company is earning. If the people of Fall River want relief they must petition to the Gas and Electric Light Commission that the price of gas be reduced in their city.

If they have money to burn, this is a good way to burn it—in regular 10 and 12 per cent. dividends and irregular dividends of 27 and 30 per cent.

The AMERICAN commends these facts to the consideration of the people of Fall River. If they are dissatisfied with the situation and the AMERICAN can help them, it will do so.

Governor Wilson Strikes the Right Note on the Tariff

Governor Wilson, after a conference with Representative William C. Redfield, has given out in advance of his speech of acceptance a definite assurance that he will stand for a "gradual revision of the tariff downward," and not for the sudden and revolutionizing reduction to a tariff exclusively for revenue.

This is distinctly encouraging. It indicates that Governor Wilson will meet the common sense of this great question, and that he will not be influenced or misled by the absurdities which William J. Bryan wrote into the Democratic platform, in which he made that plank repudiate the whole protective theory forthwith.

The AMERICAN has already pointed out that if the reduction of the tariff to the basis of revenue only would eliminate any considerable number of American industries it would be difficult to argue that the men employed in these industries, when thrown out of work and thrown upon the labor market, would not tend to reduce the price of labor—which is wages—through the very competitive system to which the Bryan platform alludes.

The greater demand for labor, the higher the price of labor. But the demand for labor is made through the number and extent of the industries requiring labor and employing labor. And when that demand is lessened through the elimination of any considerable number of these industries, then the competition for employment is increased and the price of labor is reduced. Those who wish to jump at once to the tariff-for-revenue-only basis must prove that a reasonable protective tariff does not tend to increase the number of industries in this country and the employment of labor by those industries.

It is gratifying, therefore, that Governor Wilson has the good sense promptly to repudiate the Bryan folly and to align himself with this sounder and more statesmanlike view of gradual downward revision.

We cannot abolish tariff for revenue; we should not abolish tariff for reasonable protection. We should abolish "tariff for robbery only."

The Old Problem of Man and Woman

What May Be Learned from Professor Ferrero's Contrast of the Roman Matron with the New Woman

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

EVERY thoughtful reader must be greatly interested by the discussion in Hearst's Magazine for July of "The New Woman and the Old." It is a subject which touches the most intimate relations of the two sexes of mankind, and is concerned with the basis of their happiness on earth.

Ferrero takes as typical of the woman of old Roman matrons, and his exhaustive historical knowledge enables him to make some statements which will undoubtedly surprise many readers who have not given much attention to such studies. He brings out in startling contrast the difference between the condition of married couples in ancient Rome and in modern civilized nations.

In Rome it was her father-in-law that the bride had to please rather than her husband. The father of the bridegroom had "the power," at any time after the marriage, to dissolve its bonds in case, for any reason, social or political, he were dissatisfied with the bride. Then he could compel his son to take another wife, more to his (the father's) liking.

Often it was no personal objection that the father-in-law had to his son's wife, but merely some reason of policy, which led him to exercise this tyrannical right. He would do it for what he thought was the advantage of the family as a whole, or for his own sole advantage and safety.

Ancient Family Was a Sort of Political Society.

It is very difficult for us, with our present ideas, to conceive the state of marriage in the mightiest empire that had ever been known 2,000 years ago—an empire which has affected the course of the world's history more than any other that has existed. "The ancient family was a sort of political society." In political struggles families stood together as solid units. "If not impossible, it was a thing certainly most improbable and unusual for a son, or a son-in-law, to join a party other than his father's or his father-in-law's."

Imagine such a state of things existing today! Imagine one of our political bosses compelling his son to turn away his wife, and the mother of his children, and to take another wife from among the daughters of his father's henchmen! The American political steam roller may operate as effectually, and as brutally, but it is much less simple in its machinery.

It needs but a glance at Professor Ferrero's facts to see the tremendous political significance of the ancient Roman family,—and to understand that woman played as important a part in public affairs then as now, although mainly without volition on her part. All that was demanded of her was to take exceedings pains not to throw any shadow on the pathway of her father-in-law's ambition. But woe to her if he happened to cast his eyes upon some other woman who, in the character of his son's wife, would forward his purpose better than she could!

But there is another side to the picture. With all her submission to the irresponsible will of the father-in-law, the Roman matron was, in many ways, a model of marital virtue. At the meeting of her we think instinctively of Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi, vaunting her sons above all the jewels of her worldly-minded acquaintances. The Roman matron took almost as much interest in the commonwealth as if she had been a free agent in managing it. But she was not personally much occupied with affairs outside her family circle. Spinning, weaving, the supervision of the children and the household—these were the things that occupied her time, if she were not frivolous in mind, and her habitually faithful performance of such duties has given her imperishable renown, and made her a model in history.

The "modern woman" has a different ambition. She wants to compete with her brothers, and even with her husband, in things which in ancient Rome were regarded as peculiarly the business of men—as they continued to be generally regarded in all civilized lands since Rome became only a grand memory. Literary activity is not included in these, nor works of charity and morality. She is a dashing rider, a bicyclist, an automobile driver, an aeroplanist, a public speaker, a laborer in a thousand occupations, and every day she does many things which would have caused a great scandal in Rome.

Thus the modern woman has made herself interesting from a great number of new viewpoints, but there are those who question whether she will appear as admirable on the pages of history as does the single-minded Roman matron. The modern woman has divided the interest of the opposite sex, whereas the Roman woman kept it concentrated. But the sum total of the interest she excited cannot be increased through such division. That total was fixed at a maximum by nature when it decreed the existence of the two sexes. And so again there will be doubters who will question whether in the subdivision of interest, as affecting herself, the modern woman gains anything in the end. Some will even go so far as to suggest that the final effect of the division will be a loss—just as the many-faceted eye of the fly is a less effective organ of vision than the single set of lenses that fills the human orbit. In other words, the question is whether the attraction and the power of woman are not stronger when exercised as a unit, that unit being single womanhood, than when they are spread over a broader field and penetrate what many regard as alien regions.

These Are Questions to Which We Should Give Careful Thought

These, at any rate, are questions of the highest importance, with which we are imperatively called upon to deal, and everybody ought to give to them his utmost powers of observation and reason.

Turning Our Attention to the Governor of Rhode Island

The Distinguished Executive of the Smallest of the New England States is Acting Editor of Tomorrow's Sunday American, and He Is Trying to Distance His Rival New England Governors' Efforts as an Editor—What He Has to Say Will Prove Interesting to You All.

GOVERNOR ARAM J. POTHIER of Rhode Island is acting editor of tomorrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

Like the Governors of New Hampshire, Maine and Massachusetts, who have gone before him in editorial work on the Sunday AMERICAN, Mr. Pothier has prepared an editorial, will comment on the day's news and will pass judgment on many of the more important features which will go to make up the Sunday AMERICAN.

Also, Governor Pothier has an idea that his Sunday AMERICAN is going to be a LITTLE better than those edited by his rival Governor-editors.

His editorial is a bit out of the beaten path, and those who have read it say that there is a lot of invisible ink between the lines. However that may be, it is safe to say that every reader of tomorrow's Sunday AMERICAN will peruse very carefully what he has to say. And that means that more people will read Mr. Pothier's article tomorrow then any other printed page in New England.

One of the most fascinating articles, which will be profusely illustrated, is the work of Miss Elizabeth Elliott, who took a trip up to Bar Harbor during the week and discovered an amazing condition of affairs. Miss Elliott, in fact, has been very severe with some of the society people up there and is greatly concerned about some of the goings-on in that fashionable watering place. Miss Elliott says that some of the women carry canes—and you'd hardly believe some of the other things she has to say. It seems that while Newport has abandoned its monkey dinners and its monkey shines, Bar Harbor has just begun to get interested in such things. Incidentally Miss Elliott drops in on the $100,000,000 McLean Baby and the famous Hope Diamond.

There's another seaside story in Sunday's AMERICAN from the versatile pen of Mr. Nick Young, the eminent dramatic critic, and Mr. Moynahan, the distinguished Colorado artist. No seeker for reckless recreation can afford to turn his back on this shore resort, Mr. Young concludes, but that isn't all he has to say. If you've ever been to Bass Point or want to know what goes on there you can't overlook this article.

Militiamen throughout New England will find Sunday's AMERICAN invaluable. Beginning next week New England is to witness the greatest war game ever attempted on American soil. Nearly all the militia in the six States are going to line up against New York and other States and the battles of the Blues and the invading Reds will be on. Full details of just where the game will be played, who will take part, complete personnel of the staffs, etc., will be printed in Sunday's AMERICAN.

Did you know that Boston has a candidate for President?

It has, and he is out stumping the country at the present moment. He lives in South Boston when at home, and there is a story about him and his interesting family in Sunday's AMERICAN.

Miss Floretta Vining, editor, political leader and diplomat, in her usual inimitable style announced the other day that Peddocks Island was as wide open as ever. Now when Miss Vining has anything to say about the management of the Town of Hull it starts something. Peddocks has been more or less under suspicion ever since the days of the Chinese picnics. A reporter for the AMERICAN has visited the island to see what it is that disturbs the esthetic sense of Miss Vining. His report is very interesting and will please not a few residents of the Peninsular Town.

Are you saving your money? Are you interested in that Savings Banks Life Insurance proposition? Mr. Louis D. Brandeis, who has done more to advance this cause than any other man in Massachusetts, has written an article telling the amazing achievement of Savings Banks Insurance in this State, which will interest every man of family and everyone who desires to provide against the future rainy day.

There's another $100 for someone who goes to Revere Beach on Sunday. This week you have to find the WOMAN WITH THE WHITE PARASOL. Last Sunday when the Woman with the Green Parasol was at Revere, the beach had the biggest crowd in its history. Tomorrow there is bound to be another big gathering. Well, how can you earn $100 any easier than stepping up to the girl with the white parasol with a Sunday AMERICAN in your hand and asking her if she is the lady in the case.

These are not ALL the good things prepared for Sunday's paper—no, indeedy, no—it would never do for the editor to show ALL his cards, but perhaps some of the foregoing have interested you to the extent that you won't neglect to buy tomorrow's greatest newspaper—the Sunday AMERICAN.
